A FOR BUSINESS

Business-to-business (B2B) and Business-to-Consumer (B2C) marketing is becoming more dynamic due to the increasing number of communication channels, digitally savvy customers and advanced technologies that are making it easier to block out the onslaught of messages. And marketers who are used to traditional marketing practices, need to wake up and embrace change to win their next customer while narrowing the chasm between brand awareness, brand equity and brand resonance.

Marketing is entering a new age where its role is no longer relegated to industry fairs and trade shows. Measurements are in real time today. Beyond satisfaction, advocacy and brand journeys, marketers must understand what makes customers tick and how to influence affinity and spending.

They need to change tactics fast based on market response, increasing relevance and driving quicker conversions. And this 'smart marketing' is not about technology since many of these platforms were readily available. It is all about a mindset change combining digital fluency and business acumen that is needed to drive increased productivity while still delivering high quality content and messages. Indeed, marketers and companies that have embraced new digitally delivered marketing techniques, have been at the forefront of business transformation.
